

Social Sectors

The ultimate objective of planned development is to ensure human well - being through sustained improvement in the quality of life of the people, particularly the poor and the vulnerable segments of the population. In terms of policy measures it requires emphasis on social sector development and programmes. The development of human resources contributes to sustained growth and productive employment. A healthy, educated and skilled workforce can contribute more significantly and effectively to economic development.